Attention

Class of 2020

The Wabash Plain Dealer is launching an interactive campaign to celebrate our Wabash County seniors! With COVID-19 disrupting graduation plans and daily life for our students, we want to do something special to commemorate their hard work and memories. We will be posting photo challenges at www.facebook.com/wabashpd and the best submissions will be featured on our website and in a special section published at the end of the school year. Submit your favorite memories to news@wabashplaindealer.com or post your memories and photos to your social media page using the hashtag #WCClassof2020 to participate.

Notice to readers

To reduce risks to our employees and community, the Wabash Plain Dealer is closed to the public until further notice. Payments may be dropped in the mail slot or called in. For news, call 260-225-4662 or email news@wabashplaindealer.com. For advertising, call 260-225-4947 or email tcampbell@pmginmi.com. For circulation and customer support, call 260-563-2131. To bring you the most accurate information about the evolving COVID-19 pandemic, the Wabash Plain Dealer has decided to prioritize news content over sports stories since sporting events are canceled for the time being. The Wabash Plain Dealer is committed to providing the best product to its customers and appreciates the support during this time. Thank you.

MCS receives nearly $80K SBOE grant

Problem-, Inquiry-Based Learning strategies funded

By ROB BURGESS

Wabash Plain Dealer Editor

The Indiana State Board of Education (SBOE) met virtually Wednesday for its April business meeting and approved the disbursement of additional career ladder grant money, according to Molly Deuberry Craft, senior director of strategy and communications.

In total over $350,000 will be awarded to Manchester Community Schools (MCS), Michigan City Area Schools, and Nettle Creek School Corporation.

MCS requested $80,000 and received $79,102.50. Michigan City Area Schools requested and received $182,017.50. Nettle Creek School Corporation requested and received $92,400.

The awards came after a March 30 letter of recommendation to the SBOE, Rebecca Estes, director of leadership and innovation, and Robin LeClaire, chief academic officer.

Supporting PBL and IBL strategies

In response to a Plain Dealer request Wednesday, Teresa L. Gremaux, MCS superintendent, stated the grants were competitive, and that this was the first time they had applied for and received the funds.

“We are very excited about the opportunity our teachers will have to grow in their instructional practices and provide high-quality hands-on learning to our students through Problem-Based Learning (PBL) and Inquiry-Based Learning (IBL) strategies,” stated Gremaux. “MCS is creating a system through grant funding to financially reward teachers who step into leadership roles. By building the instructional capacity within our schools, we will be developing students to utilize critical thinking skills that are essential for becoming globally competitive graduates.”

Sue Gnagy, curriculum director, stated the goal of the grant “is to create a tool that defines excellence in PBL and IBL teaching and to seek out ways to support, advance and retain those exemplary PBL and IBL teachers into leadership roles with appropriate compensation.”

“Grant funds will be used to provide stipends to participating teachers, to fund summer professional development training, and to support the advancement and retention of teachers in STEM education fields,” stated Gnagy.

According to the University of Manchester, IBL “describes an environment in which learning is driven by a process of inquiry owned by the student.” And in PBL, a

North Manchester Easter Drive-In service draws 92 cars, around 230 congregants

By ROB BURGESS

On Easter, local churches were faced with the same problem.

Gov. Eric Holcomb’s executive order had banned all in-person services. Many places of worship had already switched to virtual worship on Facebook and YouTube.

But, for congregants in North Manchester, that wasn’t enough.

So, on Sunday morning in the parking lot of Manchester High School, 92 cars and around 230 attendees attended an Easter Drive-In service for those who wanted to be together, while observing the mandated social

SSI recipients will receive automatic COVID-19 economic impact payments

Those with dependent children should still provide IRS information online

STAFF REPORT

The Social Security Administration has announced that Supplemental Security Income (SSI) recipients will receive automatic Economic Impact Payments directly from the Treasury Department, according to Doug Nguyen, Regional Communications Director. Nguyen stated Treasury anticipates these automatic payments no later than early May. SSI recipients with no qualifying children do not need to take any action to receive their $1,200 economic impact payment.

The payments will be automatic.

“SSI recipients who have qualifying children under age 17, however, should not wait for their automatic $1,200 individual payment,” he stated.

They should now go to the IRS’s webpage at www.irs.gov/coronavirus/non-filers-enter-payment-info-here and visit the Non-Filers: Enter Your Payment Information to provide their information.

By taking proactive steps to enter information on the IRS website about them and their qualifying children, they will also receive the $500 per dependent child payment in addition to their $1,200 individual payment.

If SSI beneficiaries in this group do not provide their information to the IRS soon, they will have to wait until later to receive their $500 per qualifying child.

Social Security retirement, survivors, and disability insurance beneficiaries (who don’t normally file taxes) will also qualify for automatic payments of $1,200 from Treasury. These payments are anticipated to start arriving around the end of April.

Perimenopause can last months to years

DEAR DOCTOR: I’m a healthy and active 42-year-old, but I’ve been noticing a change in my periods lately. They’re not as regular as before, and they’re a lot shorter. Could this be perimenopause? What’s going on, and what else is going to happen?

DEAR READER: Perimenopause is the transitional time that leads up to a woman’s final menstrual cycle. For some women, perimenopause can last for as little as a few months or a year. More often, it lasts for several years. In some instances, the changes associated with perimenopause can take place over the course of a decade. Although the symptoms can differ from woman to woman, they arise from the same cause. That is, certain hormonal changes within the body that precede the end of a woman’s reproductive years.

Perimenopause is the period of time during which a woman’s ovaries gradually begin to produce less estrogen, which is one of the hormones involved in the complex process that signals the uterus and the breasts to prepare for possible pregnancy. Although this shift in estrogen production is most common when a woman is in her mid-40s, it can happen earlier, when she is in her 30s. Perimenopause ends when a woman has gone a full year without a menstrual cycle, which is the start of menopause.

The symptoms that you mention are consistent with perimenopause. Many women experience changes to their menstrual cycles during this time, including fluctuations in flow, duration and regularity. These can be erratic because estrogen levels often diminish at an uneven pace, both rising and falling. However, it’s important to distinguish the normal changes that accompany the transition to menopause and symptoms that may signal other causes. If the changes that you see become extreme, such as persistent heavy bleeding, the presence of blood clots, spotting between periods or after sex, or an increase in frequency of menstruation, please check with your doctor. Other conditions such as fibroids, endometriosis or, rarely, cancer may be the cause.

The final phase of perimenopause sees the sharpest drop-off in estrogen production. This is a time during which additional symptoms often appear. These can include fatigue, breast tenderness, changes to mood, hot flashes, a worsening of the symptoms of PMS, urinary incontinence, night sweats, sleep disruption, vaginal dryness and changes to sex drive. This decline in estrogen leaves women at risk of osteoporosis, a disease in which bones gradually become porous and, thus, more fragile. Women also begin to lose the protective heart effects of estrogen, which is believed to help keep blood vessels more flexible.

Considering your age, along with the symptoms that you mentioned, it’s possible that you are experiencing perimenopause. However, due to the ongoing fluctuations in hormone levels, no one test can provide a definitive diagnosis.

Bruce D. Oswalt

Oct. 15, 1935 – April 11, 2020

Bruce Dean Oswalt, 84, passed away at home on Saturday, April 11, 2020. He was born on Oct. 15, 1935 to Roland and Marguerite (Bright) Oswalt in Wabash, Indiana.

After graduating as salutatorian of his high school class, Bruce attended Purdue University where he was in the Navy ROTC. He graduated from Purdue with a B.S. in Science and Agriculture and then served as an officer, LTJG, aboard the U.S.S. Stone County LST-1141 throughout the Pacific, including ports in Japan, Hong Kong and the Philippines. After completing his military service, Bruce taught high school science and agriculture.

Bruce married Rita-Heidi Beck on May 21, 1961. Soon after their marriage, he was awarded a National Defense Education Act Fellowship that enabled him to earn a Master's degree in Guidance and Counseling from Purdue. He went on to earn his Ed.S. in Administration and Supervision.

He was selected for the position of Supervising Counselor for the U.S. Department of Defense Overseas School Systems in Nuremberg, Karlsruhe and Bitburg, Germany. After ten years, he returned to the United States and worked for Marion High School. In 1976 he became Director of Guidance and Counseling at Winchester Community High School where he worked for 21 years. He served on many educational committees throughout the state, Our Saviour Lutheran Church council, and was a member of Winchester Kiwanis.

He was a wonderful, caring father and grandfather; a loving, devoted husband; a man of faith, strength and great character. He found ways to bring a smile and a laugh to those he met, was genuinely invested in the students he helped, and gave all of himself to those he loved.

He will be missed by all who knew him, especially his wife of almost 59 years, his children Krystal & Paul Ferguson, Karine Oswalt, Brian Oswalt, and Kirstin Wallace; his grandchildren Heidi Ferguson, David Oswalt, Anna Wallace, Amelia Oswalt and John "Jack" Wallace; his brother Alan Oswalt, sister Janice Rose, his nieces, nephews and cousins.

Due to the restrictions currently in place, a celebration of his life will be planned for a later date.

In lieu of flowers, contributions may be made to the Bruce Dean Oswalt Memorial Scholarship Fund, c/o Community Foundation of Randolph County, 120 W. Washington St., Winchester, Indiana 47394.

Walker Funeral Home in Winchester is entrusted with the arrangements. Online condolences may be shared with the family at www.walkerswinchester.com.

Roddy Dias

Private services for Roddy "Rod" Dias, 70, of Wabash, will be at Grandstaff-Hentgen Funeral Service, Wabash. Entombment will be in the Chapel of Remembrance Mausoleum at Memorial Lawns Cemetery, Wabash.

Statewide, the ISDH Thursday announced that 611 additional Hoosiers have been diagnosed with COVID-19 through testing at ISDH, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and private laboratories. That brings to 9,542 the total number of Indiana residents known to have the novel coronavirus following corrections to the previous day's total.

A total of 477 Hoosiers have died to date. Deaths are reported based on when data are received by ISDH and occurred over multiple days.

To date, 51,115 tests have been reported to ISDH, up from 48,396 on Tuesday.

Marion County had the most new cases, at 113. Other counties with more than 10 new cases were Allen (44), Elkhart (19), Floyd (10), Hamilton (15), Hendricks (18), Johnson (11), LaPorte (70), Lake (106), Porter (14) and St. Joseph (35). The Lake County totals include results from East Chicago and Gary, which have their own health departments.

The complete list of counties with cases is included in the ISDH COVID-19 dashboard at www.in.gov/coronavirus.in.gov. Cases are listed by county of residence. Private lab reporting may be delayed and will be reflected in the map and count when results are received at ISDH.

The dashboard also has been updated to make corrections based on updated information provided to ISDH.

We can praise God for all the advancements in the present age. Much that helps detour the coronavirus from causing major fallout is the use of technology. Leaders coordinate their plans from around the nation and world. Scientists employ massive testing and data to find a cure. Those in school can carry on with education using computers and e-learning. Some were able to move their jobs right into the home. Efforts forward by non-profits can even post on Facebook the best ways to aid people in need. To no surprise, the experience increased internet use and the ability to find helpful resources. So out of bad there is good, but this cannot be our hope or stability.

God's love keeps pouring over this sinful world even now because of the grace

Time and eternity

He gives to this present age. The Psalmist boasts, "Praise the Lord! Oh give thanks to the Lord, for he is good, for his steadfast love endures forever! (106:1). Of course, this love by God is enduring because the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ remain for us. "He is the radiance of the glory of God and the exact imprint of his nature, and he upholds the universe by the word of his power" (Hebrews 1:3). As the word of power, Jesus put Himself upon the cross so endurance from God for daily bread (time) and the forgiveness of sins (eternity) show forth from Him.

At the same time, there is a huge difference between time and eternity. St. Paul told Christians, "And whatever you do, in word or deed, do everything in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God the Father through him"

(Colossians 3:17). Now life may very well be advancing along, but it does not determine trust in Jesus. Unforeseen things happen, people are sinners, and technology still has an end. There is a final page to this mortal life. It is a mistake to give an illusion that victory in the present life proves God is for or against us. Jesus alone by His death and resurrection has given us what none dare ignore, which is life everlasting.

St. Paul reminds us, "But our citizenship is in heaven, and from it we await a Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who will transform our lowly body to be like his glorious body, by the power that enables him even to subject all things to himself." (Philippians 3:20-21). Christians live more than in the present because of a better life-giving promise. Regardless of the condition of being happy or sad, rich or poor, strong or weak, better or worse off life abounds from God. It has always been a gift so there is now even a resurrection of the body and life of the world to come!

The Church celebrates this eternal life shared around Jesus Christ by His Word and Sacraments. Advancements in technology are great blessings but make poor idols. They cannot cure sin, remove the penalty of death, or outsmart Satan. Only saving faith looks to Jesus for grace upon grace that is always good news. His forgiveness and love are not a progressive discovery, but the onetime guarantee for sinners. The times have always been scary, but the greater gift of eternity greets any in Christ Jesus our Lord.

DAILY SCRIPTURE

It is better to take refuge in the Lord than to trust in humans.

Psalm 118:8 | NIV

Should our lives depend on ZIP code?

Are we surprised that the wealthy residents of exclusive Fisher Island have purchased their own coronavirus test kits from another private institution to keep themselves and their employees safe?

No. As our state and federal governments have made clear, we are on our own.

According to the Miami Herald:

"Fisher Island – an exclusive enclave of multi-million-dollar condos and homes and one of the wealthiest ZIP codes in the country – has purchased thousands of rapid COVID-19 blood test kits from the University of Miami Health System for all of its residents and workers.

"The private island, set along Government Cut and nestled between Miami and Miami Beach and accessible only by boat or helicopter, worked out a deal with UHealth to make the tests available to the 800 or so families that live there, and all the workers who maintain the property and patrol its streets."

The cost was not revealed, but it likely was a pretty penny. After all, the average annual income on the island was $2.5 million in 2015.

The concern should not be that a community is taking care of its own, including employees. Makes sense. But, rather, it highlights the kind of societal inequity that makes Bernie Sanders' blood boil. Others', too.

But from the start of this pandemic, an obvious class system emerged regarding who could get tested early in the game and who had to wait for a test – if they could get tested at all.

At one point, it seemed as if members of the public had to be at death's door to be given a test. But celebrities, mayors and famous athletes appeared to get them for the asking. Money talked, even while some government officials were still talking down the potential severity of the coronavirus.

Unfortunately, this gives the lie to the happy-face cliché that has floated to the surface in this time of the coronavirus: We're all in this together.

Well, maybe not. Not when essential workers have fight their employers to get masks to do their jobs safely. Not when the governor deems wrestling as essential as a worship service. Not when African-American and Hispanic Americans have been hardest hit by COVID-19 because they're more likely to be in poor health, or lack insurance, or unable to shelter in place. It's almost comical when political leaders – too many of whom have been practicing medicine without a license – advise people with symptoms to call their primary-care doctor. Almost comical. In Florida, where lawmakers won't expand Medicaid because their lives don't depend on it, they don't care that the default primary-care doctor for the poor is the costly and crowded emergency room.

This dichotomy is not new. The coronavirus has simply thrust it in front of our faces.

Here's the real consequence:

The privilege of getting the test kits will save lives. For the not-so-rich, being denied testing early on for not meeting a set of criteria when they first asked has sometimes meant the disease progressed until it was too late to save them.

That won't be the case for those who live and work on Fisher Island. Good for them.

This editorial was first published in The Miami Herald.

It's anchors aweigh for tomorrow's Marines

Whatever the origins of the World War I Army captain's animus against the Marine Corps, his hostility was unimportant until he became commander in chief.

George Will

guished themselves in World War II's Pacific theater, from Guadalcanal to Okinawa. And shortly before Marines landed at Inchon in September 1950, reversing the tide of the Korean War.

February 23 was the 75th anniversary of World War II's most famous photograph, of Marines planting the Stars and Stripes on Iwo Jima's Mount Suribachi. It is, in a sense, a picture of the corps' future, as the current commandant envisions it.

When nature designed David H. Berger, it had a Marine in mind. From his shaved head to his shined shoes, he looks like the business end of a battering ram, which he is: The corps' 38th commandant aims to demolish decades of thinking about the corps' function. He wants it configured not for lengthy ground wars (Vietnam, Iraq, Afghanistan) but for forward-deployed capabilities in the Pacific region in support of the fleet. This, an echo of the corps' island-hopping against Japan's forces, revives the "Fleet Marine Force" idea that was adopted in 1933, after the corps abandoned its naval roots and went to war in France. Berger's vision implies fewer land-based operations with aircraft delivering Marines to distant missions.

For the past 30 years – since the end of the Cold War – the corps has, he says, been measured against itself, not against a peer competitor. Now, however, in planning for "the next fight," he has an increasingly maritime nation, China, on his mind. He wants "our highest quality" Marines mentored "for duty in the Pacific." Welcome to Okinawa, lieutenants. Given what he delicately calls a "challenging fiscal environment" – trillion-dollar deficits – the corps might need to be smaller, "to trade size for quality," and divest some legacy components, including some infantry, aviation and even armor.

He insists that nothing will change about "every Marine being a rifleman," and "the most important thing about being a Marine is being a Marine." But given China's anti-access/area denial (A2/AD) missiles and other capabilities, Berger says: "Our adversaries have initiated a new paradigm, based on long-range precision weapons and information-related capabilities." This new era of "high-volume, extended-range missile warfare" overturns "the primary assumptions on which the legacy U.S. joint force has been built – presumptive sea and air control and assured access."

Therefore, Berger says, "Visions of a massed naval armada nine nautical miles off-shore in the South China Sea preparing to launch the landing force ... are impractical and unreasonable." So, the corps needs to rethink the execution of its amphibious role. And when conducting land operations to support the Navy, Marines must be able to operate within the enemy's A2/AD zone. Rather than be captive to a stand-off role, he says, "We must evolve into the nation's 'stand-in' force."

Capt. Austin Dahmer of the Marine Corps Reserve, writing in the Naval Institute's "Proceedings," says that for Marines ashore, "Gone will be the days of plasma screens, field mess tents, and overgrown antenna farms. An infantry battalion command post will need to be capable of operating with a small enough footprint to remain clandestine and still effectively command and control."

Berger's planning refutes the Marine who in the movie "A Few Good Men" says disdainfully to a Navy officer, "I like all you Navy boys. Every time we've gotta go someplace to fight, you fellas always give us a ride." The corps Berger envisions is not just a smaller stand-alone Army. Rather, it is dispersible, hence survivable, small and light units that can deliver force in conjunction with the Navy's power projection.

"The character of war," says Berger, "is increasingly dynamic." This actually suits the Marines' constant character. Whereas the Army has forts – Bragg, Leavenworth, etc. – the Marine Corps has camps (Lejeune, Pendleton), which implies a light, nimble force that can be "first to fight." After decades with the corps expending too much energy ashore, for tomorrow's Marines, like yesterday's, it is anchors aweigh.

If the corps sheds its capacities for major forcible entries from the sea, and for prolonged land operations, might it become a mere appendage of the Navy, presaging its end as an independent service? Seven decades ago – 70 years of Marine Corps evolution – Truman desired this, but he learned how durable the corps is because it is adaptable and the nation cherishes it.

Minding Chesterton's fence

*Don't it always seem to go
That you don't know what you've got 'til it's gone?
They paved paradise, put up a parking lot
– Joni Mitchell from "Big Yellow Taxi"*

Now that all of America has had a chance to experience sudden, traumatic change, perhaps we can better appreciate conservatism's celebration of thoughtful, gradual change.

Followers of that philosophy are often caricatured as fierce opponents of all change, hidebound defenders of the status quo, however squalid it might be, against the tiniest encroachment of noble, selfless progress.

But let's presume that "thoughtful conservative" is a redundancy rather than an oxymoron and consider the words of Edmund Burke, "Rage and frenzy will pull down more in half an hour than prudence, deliberation and foresight can build up in a hundred years."

The true conservative welcomes change, but only when it is built on a solid foundation. That requires examining what we have so we know which part of it is valuable and which is not. When we replace something old with something new, we must examine not just the possible consequences but even the consequences of the consequences.

That sentiment is best expressed in the story of Chesterton's fence, which has become a sort of defining credo of conservatism:

"In the matter of reforming things, as distinct from deforming them, there is one plain and simple principle; a principle which will probably be called a paradox. There exists in such a case a certain institution or law; let us say, for the sake of simplicity, a fence or gate erected across a road. The more modern type of reformer goes gaily up to it and says, 'I don't see the use of this; let us clear it away.' To which the more intelligent type of reformer will do well to answer: 'If you don't see the use of it, I certainly won't let you clear it away. Go away and think. Then, when you can come back and tell me that you do see the use of it, I may allow you to destroy it.' "

If a fence exists, there is a reason for it. It didn't just appear. It wasn't put there by lunatics or people walking in their sleep. Fences are built by people who carefully planned them out and "had some reason for thinking (the fence) would be a good thing for somebody." Before we dismiss previous generations as fools or knaves, we'd better try to understand why they did what they did. Only then may we safely dismantle their creations.

The fence metaphor is from G.K. Chesterton's 1929 book "The Thing," in which he vigorously defended the Catholic faith, but it applies to any tradition, institution, value or human endeavor some people hold dear and other people would dismantle overnight if they could.

A human endeavor like the American experiment and the fierce devotion to freedom that undergirds it.

Those of you who have been ambivalent about America – on the fence, as it were – how do you feel about it now that we've had a brief glimpse of life without it? Does it change your mind about those who prefer that this new normal become permanent and make no pretense of easing us into it?

If you like the shortages, the lack of amenities, the inability to go where you choose, welcome to Bernie Sanders' socialist diagram of the future. If you like the sacrifices and the sense that someone is always watching to make sure you sacrifice your fair share, welcome to Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez's Green New Deal.

The loss of our identities as unique individuals, as we are herded into subservience to some perceived greater good such as a well-ordered society or a pristine planet, might be a nightmare to most of us. But it is a grand vision to some.

When ordinary life returns – or at least as much of it as we can reclaim – we'd better cherish it and be willing to fight for it. Those who see it as a dystopia won't let our fragile fence around it stop their fevered march to utopian madness.

HISTORY

Today is Friday, April 17, the 108th day of 2020. There are 258 days left in the year.

Highlight in history:

On April 17, 1961, some 1,500 CIA-trained Cuban exiles launched the disastrous Bay of Pigs invasion of Cuba in an attempt to topple Fidel Castro, whose forces crushed the incursion by the third day.

On this date:

In 1492, a contract was signed by Christopher Columbus and a representative of Spain's King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella, giving Columbus a commission to seek a westward ocean passage to Asia.

In 1521, Martin Luther went before the Diet of Worms (vohrms) to face charges stemming from his religious writings. (Luther was later declared an outlaw by Holy Roman Emperor Charles V.)

In 1524, Giovanni da Verrazano reached present-day New York Harbor.

In 1969, a jury in Los Angeles convicted Sirhan Sirhan of assassinating Sen. Robert F. Kennedy.

In 1970, Apollo 13 astronauts James A. Lovell, Fred W. Haise and Jack Swigert splashed down safely in the Pacific, four days after a ruptured oxygen tank crippled their spacecraft while en route to the moon.

In 1972, the Boston Marathon allowed women to compete for the first time; Nina Kuscsik was the first officially recognized women's champion, with a time of 3:10:26.

In 1973, Federal Express (later FedEx) began operations as 14 planes carrying 186 packages took off from Memphis International Airport, bound for 25 U.S. cities.

SPRING

Signs of spring abound: new life, budding blooms, fresh smells and warmer air. Spring is a time of renewal. Rise with the seedlings planted in fertile soil, flowering with faith, petals turned to the sky. There is another source of renewal, available in all seasons - God! Visit your house of worship weekly for renewal with Him. Depart refreshed and rejoicing, filled with strength for whatever challenges life may offer.
